5. Discussion of Graduate School’s proposed Action Plan for Departmental Commitments to Disrupting Academic Bullying. B. Hanson, graduate school ombuds, provided information on the graduate school’s desire to improve the university’s prevention of and response to bullying in academic settings and situations. The commission on graduate and professional students and policies and the Faculty Senate have reviewed the proposal and provided feedback. There is interest in establishing a working group that includes faculty members. Can the proposal be expanded to include all types of relationships e.g. faculty members. In his role as graduate ombuds, it is his responsibility to report trends and patterns of behavior as they pertain to graduate students. Commission members expressed interest in expanding the scope of the proposal to include bullying across and among all relationships within the university. There is interest in making sure there are individuals on a working group who have experienced bullying and harassment. Discussion included successful and unsuccessful experiences with addressing bullying. Commission members provided feedback on the language included in the proposal and the need for clarity. Commission members discussed whether bullying behaviors should be accounted for in evaluations, promotion and tenure processes. Commission members volunteered to serve on a working group to explore these issues. Concerns were raised about how to ensure that working group efforts are productive and not ignored. A question was raised about how this initiative might be embraced as a university-wide effort for shared governance that would result in resolutions that identify possible policy or other recommendations.
